FATE RESTS WITH JURY

Judge's Instructions Are Chiefly on Circumstantial Evidence

LOUI ANGELES, Feb. 6. — "There is nothing in the nature of circumstantial evidence that renders it less reliable than direct evidence," Judge J. R. Willis today instructed the jury which today tried Mrs. James L. Poe on a charge of having murdered James' infant son.

"It is not necessary to prove a motive," the judge's instructions continued, "but the absence of a motive is to be considered in favor of the defendant."

Reasonable Doubt.

He also called the jury's attention

The prosecution's case against McDaniel was built on circumstantial evidence and her defense on "a reasonable doubt."

There has been talk of motherhood by defense counsel said Mr. Weidman. "But I have exhibited no motherhood," and he testified to Eugene Dunbar of Phoenix, Arizona, daughter of the dead mining promoter.

Shows No Emotion.

"She will never hold her parent's hands nor look into his eyes again in this life," the prosecutor continued "because Louise Peete shot and killed him and buried him in the basement of his own home."

Mr. Peete, as throughout the trial, showed no emotion while the district attorney was appealing to the jury "to send her to the gallows."
